Roll of Honour

1914-1918

Compiled by Robert Malpass.

Foreword

This Roll of Honour which I have assembled allows a brief glimpse of the military life of the men whose names appear on the Memorial Panels displayed in the College Ante-Chapel. No academic achievements have been included, as these are documented elsewhere in College. I hope that through this document members and staff who pass by the cemeteries and memorials of our fallen will take time to stop and pay homage to them on behalf of the College. A list of cemeteries and memorials appears at the end of document, with the names of the fallen who are buried or remembered there. Unfortunately, College servants (as they were then called) have had to be omitted, as no records can be found.

I would like to thank the Rector for her encouragement, the Home Bursar Mr Eric Bennett for pointing me in the right direction, the Archivist Dr John Maddicott for granting me access to some archive material and for allowing me to reprint his fascinating article 'An Infinitesimal Part in Armageddon', Linda my wife for allowing me to commandeer her computer for the three months or so it has taken to compile the Roll, and not least to Mr Christopher Kirwan for his splendid job of editing and organizing my research.

Finally, I trust that you, the reader, will be able to find in our own age lives to match the lives given up which this Roll records.

‘And why shouldn’t I write a lyric to the “River that runs into everyone’s dug-out”?’

Harold Parry (matriculated 1915, see below)

I come from trenches deep in slime,
Soft slime so sweet and yellow,
And rumble down the steps in time
To souse ‘some shivering fellow.’

I trickle in and trickle out
Of every nook and corner,
And, rushing like some waterspout,
Make many a rat a mourner.

I gather in from near and far
A thousand brooklets swelling,
And laugh aloud a great ‘Ha, ha!’
To flood poor Tommy’s dwelling.

from In Memoriam, Harold Parry, London 1918, p.84.

The March

H.R. Freston (matriculated 1912, see below)

We were splashing along the muddy lanes:
And as I walked behind the long column,
I saw the men's shoulders swing to and fro;
And as they jolted along unevenly,
Marching at ease,
Their song came back to me on the wind;
And my heart sang with them.

When suddenly,
As the wind will sometimes cease at twilight,
Their song faded and died
And then,
Looking round,
I saw, and in a glance understood
We were passing the little graves...
Lonely and silent, I saw them side by side,
In the little new-made grave-garden:
There slept the soldiers of England;
There the heroes had found their peace.

from Collected Poems, H. Rex Freston, Oxford, B.H. Blackwell 1916.

Honour to Whom Honour

H. B. K. Allpass (matriculated 1911, see below)

When dim in the far time
It shall not be war-time.
And life be not death, and pleasures increase;
When dazzle the cheering,
And the end of the fearing,
And the manifold blessing of Commerce and Peace.

When pulpits are crowing,
And wine is a-flowing,
And friends are a-meeting who long have not met;
When fair is Earth's promise,
And you patronise "Tommies"
In the day of rejoicing you shall not forget:

'Tis Ours that you're reaping,
Ours, who lie sleeping,
Princes of Ypres and Loos and the Aisne:
To us be the glory,
Us, mangled and gory,
First honour to Us, whom you honour in vain.

Then, sorrowing greatly,
Your Jubilee stately
You shall keep for a fast to the friends who are fled;
And solemnly voicing
Shall cease your rejoicing
To toast and keep toasting the health of THE DEAD.

'An Infinitesimal Part in Armageddon': Exeter College and the First World War

reprinted from The Exeter College Association Register 1998, pp. 46-53

In 1914 Exeter College was a small and intimate society set in a university largely made up of many such societies. The College had only nine Fellows, and five of those – A B How, R R Marett, B W Henderson, C F Balleine and E A Barber – were classicists and philosophers, teaching mainly for Mods and Greats; though How, known to undergraduates as 'the Beefer', was more Bursar than scholar, and Marett had already established himself as a leading anthropologist. Of the remaining four Fellows, C T Atkinson tutored in History, J W Jenkinson in Biology, G C Cheshire in Law, and N P Williams, the Chaplain, in Theology. Three of the nine – How, Balleine and Jenkinson – had been Exeter undergraduates, and so too had L R Farnell, another classicist, who had succeeded W W Jackson as Rector in the previous year. Farnell, born in 1856 and a Fellow since 1880, was senior to his colleagues in age and scholarly renown as well as in position. How, born in 1860 and a Fellow since 1886, was the senior Fellow, and Barber, born in 1880, the junior.

The undergraduate body was comparably small and homogeneous. In the years immediately before 1914 about fifty freshmen came up each year, most of them from the major public schools. Of the 482 who matriculated between 1901 and 1911, Marlborough provided 30, Charterhouse 21, Rugby 18, Winchester 17, and Eton, Harrow, Radley and Exeter School 13 each; so 29% of the intake came from only 8 schools. Though most had been sent away to board, a substantial proportion – 42 or 9% – could still claim birth in the West Country, narrowly defined as Somerset, Devon and Cornwall. To a surprising degree, however, this British entry was leavened by other students from overseas, including 25 from the colonies, 21 from the USA, 4 from Germany and 3 from Russia. In some years the proportion might be much greater. The 43 freshmen of 1913, for example, included 5 Americans (4 of them Rhodes Scholars), 3 men from the colonies and 3 Germans. Of those taking Final Honour Schools (and many sat only for Pass degrees), most had read Modern History (20%), Lit

Hum (18%) or Law (13%). The most popular careers lay in the church (8%), the law (5%) and schoolteaching (4%). Restricted numbers and a common background created bonds which were strengthened by a wide range of College activities: not just sport (though that was central), but also the cultural and social outlets provided by the Stapeldon Society (effectively the JCR), the Church Society, the Dialectical Society, the Music Society and the Essay Club. For both dons and undergraduates term-time life revolved almost wholly around the College, to a degree nowadays difficult to recapture.

In the summer of 1914 Exeter had just celebrated its sixth hundredth anniversary, and in some style. Three days of festivities had seen the Rector and Fellows entertained to dinner in Hall by the JCR, a grand ball, a garden party (with music provided by the Hungarian Blue Band), a commemorative sermon from the Visitor, and lunch in a marquee, where the Chancellor, Lord Curzon, had proposed the toast Floreat Exon. Shortly afterwards, on 4 August, in the middle of the Long Vacation, came the declaration of war. 'The memories of last term', wrote Farnell a few months later, 'are as a golden vista seen across a dark and perilous flood.' The war's immediate effect was to change the intentions of many who had expected to come up that autumn. Only 30 freshmen matriculated at Exeter in October 1914, compared with 59 in 1911, 53 in 1912 and 43 in 1913, and all colleges were similarly affected by the rush to enlist. So too were their Fellows (and it was a salient difference between the First World War and the Second that in the First the majority of dons who left their colleges to serve their country joined the army, but in the Second the civil service or home-based intelligence). Balleine, Sub-Rector since 1913 and already active in the OTC, joined the Rifle Brigade as soon as war broke out; Atkinson, who had poor eyesight, went off to join the General Staff at the War Office; Jenkinson and Cheshire secured commissions in the Worcestershire and Cheshire Regiments respectively, both from January 1915, and Barber in the Shropshire Light Infantry from August 1915 and later in the Intelligence Corps. By the autumn of the war's second year the College had thus lost five of its nine Fellows, and numbers were depleted further when Farnell temporarily retired with a nervous breakdown in 1916 and Williams took up a post at Eton in the same year. From 1916 until the end of the war Governing Body meetings were rarely attended by more than four Fellows: Henderson, who had taken over from Balleine as Sub-Rector, How, Marett, and Atkinson, who put in regular appearances from London. Much more difficult to cope with than the contraction of the Fellowship was the decline in undergraduate numbers. For much of the war the College was virtually empty of its usual residents. Those holding places at the start gradually dropped out as they were accepted for military service, while matriculations fell away almost completely, with only nineteen coming up in 1915, three in 1916 and two in 1917. Those who remained were almost all foreigners: Marett later recalled that at the lowest point there were only seven men in residence, three Indians, two Americans, a Swiss and a Norwegian. One consequence was that almost all normal undergraduate activities ceased. Between November 1915 and February 1919 no entries at all were made in the JCR Suggestions Book; from June 1916 chapel services were discontinued and arrangements made to use Trinity's chapel; and from October 1917 the Library was open to such few undergraduates as there were for only one hour a week, presumably in order to save money. Lack of money was indeed the most pressing problem, in Exeter as in other colleges, as the disappearance of undergraduates struck hard at college and university income. In the three years prior to 1914 the two main components of Exeter's income had been College Dues and Tuition Fees, averaging £3886 and £3613 per annum respectively. But both were dependent on undergraduate numbers, and the slump here produced a near catastrophic slump in income – to £1363 and £1060 in 1915, to £856 and £553 in 1916, to £557 and £304 in 1917, and – the nadir – to £494 and £200 in 1918. In the three worst years of the war the annual internal income (that is, exclusive of rents, dividends and trust funds) averaged only £1700 compared with £9731 between 1911 and 1913: a fall of nearly 83%.

The College survived this crisis by a measure of self-denial from the Fellows, strict attention to economies, and the good management of Bursar How. Jackson, the retired Rector, offered to forego £100 of his £500 pension, an offer gratefully accepted by the College; the Sub-Rector's salary was reduced; payments to the Rector and Fellows from the Tuition Fund were cut by a third; spending on the maintenance and repair of buildings was heavily pruned; the tenants' annual dinner was suspended; and the gardener's salary of £15 a year was stopped and 'other arrangements' (unspecified) made. The absence of several Fellows on war service made possible some additional savings, while another college, Magdalen, generously donated £100 to Exeter for several years. Perhaps the most valuable lifeline, however, lay in the income from accommodation which Exeter, like other colleges, was able to offer to the army – to the Oxon and Bucks Light Infantry at the start of the war, then to three batteries of heavy artillery, and latterly to Royal Flying Corps cadets. The necessary domestic adjustments produced some minor friction (College Order of 1 June 1917: ‘That the baths be closed after this term unless satisfactory arrangements be made with the military authorities for the payment of the bathman’s wages’). But generally relations were cordial, not least because the soldiers’ presence brought in dependable funds from the War Office. That was why the ‘Room rents’ entry in the College accounts did not fall off nearly so sharply as other sources of income derived from undergraduate payments. So much a garrison did the College become that from November 1916 the catering was handed over to the military.

In these extraordinary circumstances the SCR and the Governing Body maintained a simulacrum of ordinary life. Although conviviality may have diminished (part cause and part consequence perhaps of the College Order of 1 May 1915 ‘that the Common Room shall no longer supply alcoholic drinks so long as the war lasts’), business continued. Orders were passed for the repair of Mr Twist’s cowshed at South Newington; interminable negotiations proceeded with the Brymbo Steel company for the working of ironstone at the same north Oxfordshire farm; the Oxford Beekeepers Association was given permission to hold an afternoon meeting in the Old Bursary and the Ophthalmological Congress to hold a reception in the garden (‘provided that the catering be done from outside and no ice-pails be put on the grass and no bands be present’). But teaching, the College’s central activity, dropped away almost entirely. At the start of the war the remaining Fellows had arranged to take on the teaching responsibilities of those absent. ‘In Mr Balleine’s absence on military service his pass work was divided between Mr How and Dr Henderson. Dr Marett undertook the Tacitus lectures in Hilary Term 1915, Mr How the Herodotus and Dr Henderson the Pass unseens’, the Tuition Fund Committee Minutes record. But with undergraduates sometimes down to single figures, even this doubling up is likely to have left Fellows with little enough to do.

This was a depressing feature of the local scene. But beside the College’s mounting casualties it was a trivial cause for unhappiness. During the course of the war 771 Exeter men saw active service, almost all of them in the army. Of these, 141 were killed: the entire intake for just over 2½ years at pre-1914 rates of entry. At 18% of those serving, Exeter's losses were exactly in line with the average for all Oxford colleges. Much depended here on a college's social composition, and those with the highest public school entries fared worse than others with a smaller proportion from public schools; Corpus with 25% casualties and St Edmund Hall with 10% represented those two extremes. All these figures were substantially above those for the British forces as a whole, in which about 12% of all who served were killed. The reason for the discrepancies, both within Oxford and between Oxford men and others, should be obvious. Whatever the make-up of the particular college, recruits from Oxford colleges were overwhelmingly public school men who were quickly commissioned as junior officers and whose lives as leaders in the front line were generally short. 123 of Exeter's 141 casualties (87%) were second lieutenants, lieutenants or captains; only four were privates, none were NCOs and only seven were majors or above. In other respects, however, Exeter's experience mirrored that of all British communities, corporate or local. The great majority of those lost – 113 (80%) – died on the western front, in France or Belgium. Of the remainder, five died at Gallipoli, some in Mesopotamia and the Near East, and one in the Easter Rising. Casualties were not evenly distributed over the whole period of the war, but peaked at particular times, notably in September 1915, which saw nine deaths in the battle of Loos, and in July 1916, the month of the Somme, when ten died. The College's Roll of Service, which briefly recorded the military careers of all Exeter's soldiers, is full of the evocative names of the places where they fell, familiar to any reader of First World War memoirs: Aubers Ridge, Vimy Ridge, Neuve Chapelle, Bethune, Cuinchy, Warlencourt, Contalmaison, Mametz, High Wood.

As in all colleges, the most vulnerable were those who had matriculated in the years immediately preceding the war, most of them in their early twenties. Worst hit in Exeter's case were those who had come up in 1911 and 1912: from the first of these years 23 out of 59 (39%) were killed, and from the second 18 out of 53 (34%), including 4 of the year's 7 Scholars. Proportionately, and perhaps unexpectedly, the Fellowship suffered equally severely, losing Sub-Rector Balleine, who was killed in France in July 1915, and Jenkinson, who died at Gallipoli. The first Exeter casualty was an older man, J Norwood, who had come up from Rugby in 1894, made a career as a soldier, and already won the VC at Ladysmith in the Boer War. He was killed at Petit Morin on 8 September 1914, just over a month after the outbreak of war. The last casualty was W A White. Accepted for the College but not yet matriculated, he was killed in France on 3 October 1918, a few weeks before the armistice. Two Exeter men won the Military Cross and one, G A Maling, the Victoria Cross. Maling had come up from Uppingham in 1907 to read Physiology and had joined the RAMC when war broke out. He gained his VC, according to the citation,

For most conspicuous bravery and devotion to duty during the heavy fighting near Fauquissart on Sept. 25, 1915. Lt Maling worked incessantly with untiring energy from 6.15 a.m. on the 25th till 8.a.m. on the 26th, collecting and treating in the open under heavy shellfire more than 300 men. At about 11 a.m. on the 25th he was flung down and temporarily stunned by the bursting of a large high-explosive shell, which wounded his only assistant and killed several of his patients. A second shell soon after covered him and his instruments with debris, but his high courage and zeal never failed him, and he continued his gallant work single-handed.

Maling married a nurse in 1917, survived the war, had four children, became a GP in south London and died in 1929, aged only forty.

Undoubtedly the best known of all Exeter's contingent was another decorated survivor, P T B Clayton, universally known as 'Tubby'. Graduating from Exeter with a First in Theology in 1909 and ordained in 1911, Clayton joined up as an army chaplain in 1914. Together with his friend Neville Talbot, he established a rest-home at Poperinghe for those passing to and from the Ypres salient, later to become famous as Toc H (in the language of morse signallers). 'Tirelessly energetic', according to his biographer, 'his magnetic personality became known and loved by thousands behind and in the front line.' He was awarded the MC in 1917.

At the time, however, the courageous men such as Maling and Clayton who lived out the war were less in mind than those who were dying. In a generation when undergraduates and dons were particularly close to each other and shared in the same confined and masculine ethos of college life, the growing toll of casualties weighed very heavily on those at home. ‘In our individual and private no less than in our official capacities’, wrote Marett, ‘we had regarded these men almost as sons... Of the friendships of my later manhood and middle age I dared hardly to think, so many ghosts did it summon up.’ Farnell had taken a specially strong interest in those serving, noting their careers and in many cases their deaths in jotted memoranda which survive in the College archives, and the losses of the war almost certainly contributed to his breakdown in 1916. Those who served did little publicly to record their experiences, and Exeter turned out no Graves or Sassoon or Blunden; though it did produce one or two of those many subalterns, brought up on Horace and Propertius, who wrote nostalgically about home, family and country in the innumerable volumes of minor verse which were a much more characteristic product of the war. The dead were better memorialised, however, in their letters home and in the brief biographies, often concluding with colonels’ commendations, which were afterwards published in the Stapeldon Magazine. M W M Windle, for example (matriculated 1911 from Blundell’s, Second in Mods 1913, 2nd Lieut. Devonshire Regiment 1914 – ‘long remembered among us as the keenest of oarsmen, hardest of workers, and a tall, splendid young officer of the finest type’), wrote home from France on 24 September 1915:

But to return to the classics. Thucydides is a gentleman whose truth I never appreciated so thoroughly before. In his description of the last great effort of the Athenians to break out of Syracuse he tells how the officers lectured and encouraged their men right up to the last moment, always remembering another last word of counsel, and wishing to say more, yet feeling all the time that however much they said it would still be inadequate. Just the same with us now. We’ve all lectured our platoons, but something still keeps turning up, and after all we can only play an infinitesimal part in Armageddon! Well, we’re parading in a minute. Goodnight and heaps of love.”

Windle was killed in the battle of Loos two days later.

Cheerful, even jaunty (whatever their writers may have felt), such letters had their counterparts in the proud and stoical obituaries, complete with citations, which often followed. 'He had times without number proved himself absolutely fearless, and it was in a most magnificent attack that he was killed' (Colonel's letter on C G Jelf – Marlborough, Open Scholar 1905, Second in Mods and Greats, killed at Loos, October 1915). 'He died a very gallant death, as he went over the parapet to set an example to the men at a time when things were looking very black for us' (Commanding Officer's letter on G S Robertson, Open Mathematical Scholar 1909, Second in Maths Mods, Second in Greats, hoping to read for holy orders, killed at Loos, 29 September 1915). Intended to console and fortify, and occasionally perhaps to conceal, such letters were as authentic a part of the experience and literature of the war as the work of authors who wrote less privately, for a wider readership, and with a different point of view.

There was one group associated with the College whose wartime activities remain entirely obscure: College servants. The younger servants certainly joined up or were conscripted, for How tells us that their absence made it difficult to look after the officers quartered on the College, and five of them 'absent on service' were receiving small grants from the Governing Body in 1917. But they were part of the town, not the College, and no College document or memorial records their fortunes.

When the war was over normality of a sort rapidly returned to Exeter. At the start of 1919 even the College Register broke away from its dry and formal record of Scholarships and Exhibitions awarded, leases entered into, etc, to note, almost journalistically, that 'the College began to recover rapidly in the early part of this year from the effects of the war: in the Hilary term the students numbered forty: in the summer term one hundred and fifteen (including fourteen American officer-students): in the Michaelmas term one hundred and eighty-five, many of them ex-officer and ex-service students receiving government grants'. The 146 who matriculated in 1919, 55 in Trinity and 91 in Michaelmas, must still stand as the record for the largest number of undergraduates ever matriculated in a single year.

But the war also left much unfinished business, the most pressing part of which concerned the commemoration of the dead. By the spring of 1921 a War Memorial Fund had raised £1327 from some 244 subscribers: enough to endow an Exhibition for the sons or brothers of those killed in the war and to pay for the brass memorial plate which still dominates the ante-chapel. The Exhibition was advertised in 1921 but apparently not awarded until 1926. The first holder was H A J Windle (d. 1975), younger brother of the Windle who had played his own 'infinitesimal part in Armageddon' and died at Loos. If the Exhibition was uncontentious, the chapel memorial caused more debate. The large brass plate which comprised it was designed by Sir Reginald Blomfield, old member, Honorary Fellow, and famous architect (of Lady Margaret Hall, among other buildings), who had already been responsible for the restoration of the Hall in 1904. As the architect of the Menin Gate he had some experience with war memorials. The cost of what he proposed for Exeter, nearly £700 or half the sum raised, left the College 'rather aghast', in Farnell's words, and there was much correspondence about ways of reducing it. In the end, however, what had originally been proposed was carried through. The memorial, recording the full name, rank, regiment, and place of death of all the fallen was unveiled on 28 May 1921. There had been some initial uncertainty about the right words for the inscription. Those finally settled on – Tanquam aurum in fornace probavit illos Deus, ('As gold in the furnace God proved them') – from the Book of Wisdom, were an unusual choice for First World War memorials, and an imaginative one. Equally unusual, and still more imaginative, must have been the choice of the Russian Contakion for the Departed, sung unaccompanied by the choir at the unveiling service. Subscribers to the fund, often the parents of those who had died, were present in large numbers. Apologising later to Farnell for some apparent brusqueness at the unveiling, one of them, E O Payne, whose eldest son had been killed on the first day of the Somme in 1916, wrote: 'The fact was that neither my wife or myself had sufficient command of ourselves to speak just then.' Many must have felt the same.

Of the Fellows who had seen the war through, Henderson died in 1929; Williams went on to become Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity, dying in 1943; Marett and Barber became Rectors in turn, dying respectively in 1943 and 1965; Atkinson died in 1964, aged 89; and Cheshire went on to become Vinerian Professor of English Law, dying only in 1978, aged 92. In his old age, when he could not sleep, Atkinson would while away the night by recalling the names of his pupils, year by year, or by running through the names of unit commanders in the expeditionary force of 1914. His death broke a distant and vicarious link with another war; for Atkinson had succeeded C W Boase as History tutor in 1898, and when Boase himself had been elected, in 1850, the then Rector had matriculated at Exeter in the year of Waterloo.

The names are derived from the Roll of Honour in the ante-chapel (whence the title of this record); there they are arranged by year of matriculation, here alphabetically. A small number of errors in the ante-chapel Roll have been corrected, and three omissions from it, C.L.Duff-Gordon, H. St B. Sydenham, and H.E. Whiteman, have been added. We here commemorate a total of 143 Exeter men killed in the War. Twenty-two of them had earned an order, medal or mention (1 OBE, 3 DSO, 7 MC, 1 Croix de Guerre, 10 Mentions in Despatches or 'by the Secretary of State') during their First World War service. The fields of death were: France and Flanders 112, UK 8 (Easter Rising, zeppelin raid, accident, or death from wounds received overseas), Gallipoli 7, Mesopotamia 6, Palestine and Egypt 4, Italy 3, unknown or doubtful 2 (Serbia, Kriston), Salonika 1. All those recorded were serving in the allied armies, or in the RAF into which the army's Royal Flying Corps was merged on 1 April 1918, or in hospital units. The record of nationality follows the Commonwealth War Graves Commission, which appears to include under 'U.K.' not only the Channel Islands but also Rhodesia and Australia (but not Canada or South Africa).

VC Citation, London Gazette 27th July 1900: John Norwood, Lieutenant, 5th Dragoon Guards. Date of Act of Bravery 30th October, 1899. "On 30th October 1899, this officer went out from Ladysmith (South Africa) in charge of a small patrol of the 5th Dragoon Guards. They came under a heavy fire from the enemy, who were posted on a ridge in great force. The patrol, which had arrived within about 600 yards of the Ridge, then retired at full speed. One man dropped, and Second Lieutenant Norwood galloped back about 300 yards through heavy fire, dismounted, and picking up the fallen trooper, carried him out of fire on his back, at the same time leading his horse with one hand. The enemy kept up an incessant fire during the whole time that Second Lieutenant Norwood was carrying the man until he was quite out of range."
